

CREA S-175 Section 3. Legal Writing (CRN: 30139)

Gilbert Whittemore PhD, JD, Of Counsel, Stalter and Kennedy, LLP

This course is designed for law students, students considering law school, or writers who wish to improve their analytical writing. It is based on the assumption that good legal writing communicates well-considered ideas clearly, concisely, and accurately. Students use the elements of good writing to construct legal arguments, to argue from precedent and principle, and to use facts effectively. They draft a variety of basic legal documents that may include a case brief, a complaint, an answer, an opinion letter, a legal memorandum, and a statute. Course materials are based on contemporary social issues drawing on the areas of constitutional due process, criminal law, domestic relations law, and the right to privacy.
