

IEL S-10 Section 23B. Integrated Skills (CRN: 31029)

Jeffrey E. Diluglio MEd

These classes address the integrated development of the four major communicative skills—listening, speaking, reading, and writing—by using designated texts and instructional procedures that prepare students to use English in several academic and social contexts. Group and individual activities guide the study of contemporary literature and speech, and students learn to use the English of American university work. Given the international importance of English, students are also introduced to the features of many varieties of the language.
